

d.light Adds Al Wood, Tech Industry Veteran, as CFO
Former CFO of Tapjoy joins executive team to accelerate growth

SAN FRANCISCO–(October 1, 2013) – d.light, a for-profit social enterprise that manufactures and distributes solar lighting and power products with primary markets in the developing world, today announced the hiring of Al Wood as the new Chief Financial Officer. Mr. Wood, former CFO of the mobile advertising platform Tapjoy, will join the executive team and lead d.light’s finance and accounting operations from the company’s headquarters in San Francisco. With the hire of Mr. Wood, an experienced Silicon Valley technology executive, d.light continues to grow its executive team and expand the company’s ability to scale the company’s business.

“We’re very excited to have such an exceptional leader join our company,” said Donn Tice, Chairman and CEO, d.light. “By leveraging Al’s history of guiding the rapid expansion of technology companies, d.light will grow to have an even stronger financial foundation with which to drive growth and scale our business worldwide.” In his new role, Mr. Wood will focus on d.light’s financial health, including improve planning and financial controls, and support regional offices to improve overall operational visibility.

Mr. Wood joins d.light after an extensive career growing young technology companies and leading three through successful initial public offerings. After years of operating experience in Silicon Valley technology companies, Mr. Wood led the 2003 IPO of the mobile device operating system company PalmSource. At Veraz Networks, a telecom equipment manufacturer in Africa, Latin America, and India, he led a successful 2007 IPO and subsequent merger with Dialogic, serving as CFO of the combined companies. At his most recent post as the CFO of Tapjoy, Mr. Wood helped guide the rapid scaling and growth of the mobile start-up, from $20 million in sales to over $200 million.
